

CUT TO THE CHASE: 12 STEPS TO A PUBLISHABLE WRITING STYLE FOR ESL WRITERS

Informational Overview Seminar

February 11, 2011

12:00-1:00 p.m.

FL2-1001

Workshop Series

February 18; March 4, 18, April 1, 15, 29; May 20, 2011

10:00 a.m.-12:00 p.m.

CG4-2020

Facilitator: Mary Golden, Certified ESL Instructor

If you're an ESL writer dedicated to producing more and better work for publication, this program is for you! Offered in seven, 2-hr mini sessions, this workshop includes individual development plans, tools/strategies, skill development, reviews of award-winning papers, guest speakers, practice sessions, and personal coaching all designed to help you learn how to:

- Develop effective writing techniques while maintaining your own personal style.
- Work through grammatical challenges common to your particular language group.
- Identify and eliminate patterns of errors in your writing.
- Determine the appropriate amount of detail necessary to support your findings.
- Overcome structural problems that interfere with clear communication.
- Design sentences as forms that carry content.
- Prioritize corrections and identify errors that can be left to a journal's post-acceptance copy editors.
- Work with a writing mentor.
- Choose writers to read and emulate.
- Transform your writing into a CAFÉ (Concise, Accessible, Fluent, Eloquent) personal writing style.
- Expand from writing only for your peers to communicating science to the public.
- Develop and follow a writing plan that enhances your career

Mary Golden is a certified ESL instructor, a science editor for ESL authors, chief editorial assistant for the Monthly Weather Review, founder of CommSci in 2003, and a contributor to Eloquent Science: A Practical Guide to Becoming a Better Writer, Speaker, and Atmospheric Scientist by David M. Schultz (2009).

Register: EOD Training Catalog via Connect:
<https://www.fin.ucar.edu/hrisConnect/employee>.

Contact Cheryl Cristanelli, x8708, cherylc@ucar.edu